Following the 1973 Time Fades Away tour, Neil Young wrote and recorded an Irish wake of a record called Tonight's the Night and went on the road drunkenly playing its songs to uncomprehending listeners and hostile reviewers. Reprise rejected the record, and Young went right back and made On the Beach, which shares some of the ragged style of its two predecessors.

"At the beach" is a little more general -- if you say "she is at the beach," she might be in the water, or at a shop near the beach buying ice cream, or even on vacation in a beach town. If you say "she is on the beach," it means she is actually sitting, walking or lying on the sand. We don't say "in the beach." 12th June 2007
